AMS, SCA Meeting

The Appomattox Middle School S-CA meeting was opened and Susan Smith asked for all bus loads to leave on one bell early in order to get their books and things. Then we discussed having a dance. We decided to have a dance on December 13. It will be a charity dance. Each student that comes must bring a toy or 25 cents.

Mr. Davis, our principal, wants the whole student body to spread the word around that the PTA is selling Christmas trees.

We discussed the cafeteria procedure and said that it was a good idea keeping the students in when it is cold because the students kept going upstairs to get their coats and it bothers other classes.

Then we discussed the hall passes. After that the meeting was closed.

ths Show Concern for Environment 4-H Conservation Program

This 4-H'er is lugging trash and debris collected from the waters of a local stream. Youths involved in the 4-H conservation program participate in projects and activities that help beautify the local environment.

America approaches centennial celebration, communities are hard beautifying and improving the local environment. Whether its cleaning up streams, planting new foliage, protecting endangered species, recycling materials or simply cleaning up the neighborhood, we're all working to preserve up" our country's heritage for our country's 200th birthday.

Leading in the forefront of these ecology efforts are more than 1,000,000 boy and girl members in the national 4-H conservation of natural resources program. Alone and with the 4-H'ers are involved in the planning and execution of programs to improve the environmental quality. Assisting them in these efforts is John Deere, program sponsor who provides a full complement of awards and incentives to outstanding individuals and groups in the program. A maximum of four awards of honor are provided outstanding 4-H'ers in each state and an expense-paid trip to the National 4-H Congress in Chicago, Dec. 1-5, is awarded a top 4-H conservationist in each state. Climaxing the annual 4-H event, the national winners will be honored with each receiving a $1,000 educational scholarship courtesy of John Deere.

Group awards include a maximum of four certificates for outstanding club work in conservation in each county. Ten clubs in each state receive certificates in recognition of their 4-H conservation efforts. And the county in each state reporting the most outstanding 4-H conservation program effort earns a $50 cash award from John Deere to further their conservation efforts.

A 4-H group in Illinois conducted an on-going study of roadside erosion as part of their 4-H conservation effort. Through their efforts the 4-H'ers discovered nearly a million square feet of roadside had eroded. With the assistance of county officials, the youths helped plant seedlings on the roadside to save the soil, make the roadways safe for motorists and enhance the area's beauty.

Enhancing outdoor beauty was part of a Pennsylvania 4-H group's conservation activities. The 4-H'ers planted some 2,000 shrubs and trees to serve as food and wildlife cover. They also played a major role in planning and conducting a county conservation field day. And in cooperation with a local Kiwanis Club the youths conducted conservation demonstrations that reached some 4,500 local residents.

For more information on the 4-H conservation program and activities in your area contact the county extension service office.
